The FBI is investigating a case of arson involving a fire at a house in a Washington state suburb on Friday, while police hunted for a person of interest after a body was found following a murder-suicide in Massachusetts, law enforcement officials said on Sunday. A man who lived in the house where the fire occurred is suspected of setting it, said Olympia, Washington, police Chief Cynthia Baldwin. Police had yet to confirm the identity of the person who died in a car crash early on Sunday, according to a statement from police in Middleton, Massachusetts. The body was believed to be the man's wife, WBZ-TV reported, but police were waiting on the identification before releasing that information. Police found a body in the vehicle of the car crash in the village of Holden on the southeast coast of Massachusetts, a few miles from Boston. No foul play was immediately suspected in the Holden car crash, but police were investigating whether the man and woman had been in a relationship, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. Baldwin said she expected to make more announcements on the case in the coming days, as investigators continue to work. "We've been here a long time. We've been doing this a long time. And with this kind of thing, you just have to keep your perspective and be persistent," she said. "I have some pretty strong feelings on this case. I'm not going to share them with you in public," she added. "It is both a tragic and unusual homicide and we are doing everything we can to determine the facts, and to see that justice is done. This is a highly unusual set of circumstances, and as you can imagine, it's a very active investigation," she said. A local official says a body was found in the wreckage of a car that crashed in the town of Holden, Mass., on Sunday. A car smashed into a house in Holden, Mass., killing the man who was driving and the woman who was with him, a police official says. 1cdb36666d
